SHORT BIOGRAPHY

Dimitra Lampropoulou holds a lecturer position of modern and contemporary social history in the Department of History and Archaeology at the University of Athens. She was born in Athens in 1969. She studied history and archaeology and received her Doctorate from the Department of History and Archaeology of the University of Athens. Her research interests include labour and gender history, the history of social movements, history of youth, oral history, and the study of memory. She has published various chapters and articles in collective volumes. In the period 2005-2008 she worked in the Thematic Group “Work, Gender and Society” of the research project CLIOHRES (Sixth Framework Network of Excellence CLIOHRES.net) under the coordination of Berteke Waaldijk (University of Utrecht) and Carla Salvaterra (University of Bologna). Since 2012 she participates in the research project THALES - University of Crete – “Forms of public sociability in 20th century urban Greece: associations, networks of social intervention and collective subjectivities” co-funded by the European Union and Greek national funds (2012-2015) (coordinator: Efi Avdela, University of Crete). The project brings together historians, political scientists and social anthropologists in Greece and abroad to study aspects of the history of voluntary associations in twentieth-century Greece. Her current research project concerns the education, work, collective action and everyday life of night pupils, namely young workers who attended secondary night schools in post-war Greece and participated in the 1960s youth movement. She is a member of the Greek Oral History Association, the Modern Social History Archives (ASKI), the European Labour History Network, and of the editorial board of the peer-reviewed journal Historein: A Review of the Past and Other Stories.
